SCREEN TIME — FINDING THE RIGHT BALANCE

📱 Screens are part of childhood — but balance matters

For children aged 5–11, research suggests that too much or poorly timed screen use can:

- 😴 Affect sleep — particularly when screens are used close to bedtime.
- 🚴 Reduce physical activity — when screen time replaces active play, outdoor time and exercise.
- 🧠 Impact learning & development — especially when screens crowd out reading, creative play, conversation and hands-on experiences.
- 💭 Affect emotional wellbeing — some research links higher levels of screen use with poorer wellbeing and emotional/behavioural difficulties, although the relationship is complex and varies between children.
- 👨‍👩‍👧 Reduce family connection — screens can interrupt conversations, shared meals and quality time together.

What matters most?

> It's not simply "How many hours?" — ask "What is the screen replacing?"

👍 Helpful habits at home

Protect sleep

No screens for at least 1 hour before bedtime and, where possible, keep devices out of bedrooms.

Make time for movement

Aim for at least 60 minutes of physical activity each day.

Create screen-free spaces & times

For example: mealtimes, bedrooms and family conversations.

Choose quality over quantity

Look at what children are watching/playing, who they are interacting with and whether it is age-appropriate. Co-viewing and talking about content can make screen use more positive.

Be a role model

Children learn from the digital habits they see around them too.

Key message for parents:

🌱 Screens can be part of a healthy childhood — as long as they don't crowd out sleep, movement, play, learning and relationships.
