

Art or Vandalism?

Graffiti could be seen as the most popular illegal act of the 21st century. Worldwide, graffiti has become a new art style. Someone known for this style in particular is 'Banksy'. 'Banksy' is a mystery to many people and has become well known for his symbolic art work, highlighting the global disasters around the world such as war, poverty and more. It is clear that not everybody agrees with 'his' ideas, which leads us to the big question - is it art or is it vandalism?

Since 1997, the puzzling 'Banksy' has been amazing the global communities with 'his' fascinating art. Without a doubt many members of the public have inspired by 'his' breathtaking murals and all the stories they tell. It's clear for all to see that 'Banksy's' street art highlights the global issues such as war and politics; encouraging others to make the right choices. Some would suggest the world needs 'Banksy' to make it a colourful place and a brighter place to live. It could be said 'Banksy' is here to stay!

It's clear for all to see that 'Banksy' has many followers and his work is greatly admired, however, not everyone agrees with 'his' art. The gist of the matter is: does the notorious 'Banksy' ask permission to do his murals? Some might say that 'Banksy' is inspiring the next generation of vandals! Is 'his' art really a desirable distraction?

It is clear to see there are 'Banksy' lovers and haters. In my opinion 'Banksy's' murals are art. 'Banksy' is spreading his positive art through out the world and he causes no malice. 'Banksy's' objective is to let people see the good in the world; his intention are pure. This 'rebellious' hero has a heart of gold. What are your thoughts on the infamous 'Banksy'?
