Improving performance through performing arts

Learning isn't confined to the classroom.

Research* shows that children and young people who regularly engage in performing arts become more confident and competent learners and...

- feel more confident in their communication
- are better at solving problems
- are more able to change their perspective
- are more innovative and entrepreneurial
- develop a better sense of humour
- spend less time in front of the TV or a computer
- are more likely to be a central character in the classroom and enjoy school
