Key knowledge
'Daily life' describes the things that typically happen every day. Daily life is much different now, but has some similarities to the past
In 1880, the law changed so that all children between five and ten had to go to school
From 1918, children stayed at school until they were 14. This meant there were secondary schools as well.
100 years ago children wrote on slates with pencils. A slate was a piece of stone, a bit like a tile.
In 1988, the law changed so that all children had to study the same subjects. They followed the national curriculum . It is still used today.
